Still in business but gone from the station

WH Smith is one of the world's oldest retailers, this year celebrating its 225th anniversary. We have three branches in our immediate area, one in Muswell Hill, one in North Finchley and one in Market Place, Hampstead Garden Suburb.

But how many remember that there also used to be a busy WH Smith kiosk at East Finchley tube station? Long out of business and shuttered up, the kiosk is just inside the Causeway entrance to the station, and its old-style sign can still be seen there.

Meanwhile, WH Smith is marking its anniversary by donating vouchers to 225 schools across the country and raising money for three charities nominated by its staff: Cancer Research UK, Mind and the National Literacy Trust.

Craig Johnson, manager at the Muswell Hill store, said: "We're really excited to have the opportunity to support local schools and to help to improve their library facilities. Getting more and more children to read is something we're all passionate about and our work with the National Literacy Trust this year backs that up."

The store is also celebrating 25 years of service each for store manager Claudia and shop assistant Maria Kendall, who lives in Fortis Green where her husband runs the antique clock shop.

Have you got talent?

Would-be performers have the chance to get in front of an audience every Thursday evening at the Bald Faced Stag pub in the High Road. Actress and singer Shereen Roushbaiani is hosting and organising Open Mic sessions from 7.30pm for music, poetry, comedy and other acts.

Shereen says: "I want to bring more creativity to the community and get people to try something new or just have fun watching others. Everyone is welcome."
